Ebb and Flow - Haberdashery

'The energy of flowing water is reimagined in an interior space using the magic of light.'

Combining innovation in lighting and Brook Street's history, Ebb and Flow pays tribute to the river Tyburn, the hidden underground tributary of the Thames. By using advanced caustic modelling to explore how lighting effects can be created through layers of cast acrylic, molds were CNC-milled to create a series of unique water casts allowing light to be manipulated as if dancing across the ceiling surface.

Often in today's cities we find that the natural lay of the land that originally influenced the urban development has been lost beneath layer upon layer of concrete; this forces city dwellers to live within conformed patterns of street layouts, grids and systems, however the way we move and think lends itself to a more fluid approach. This tributary of the Thames was a navigable waterway in the Victorian era, and its flowing form is a nice antidote to the formulaic city development going on all around it. For the final sculpture, the casts were suspended in a formation mimicking the river Tyburn, scattering light reminiscent of that reflecting off a moving river surface.
